Video industry rates its games

WASHINGTON (AP) — The video games industry, trying to head off a bill that would require programs to be labeled for sex and violence, told a Senate panel it will have a voluntary rating system by next December's holiday-buying season.

"Products coming to market after Nov. 1 will, if submitted by publishers in a timely fashion, be rated under the new system," Jack Heistand, chairman of an industry group that is devising the rating system, said Friday.

The system, once up and running, will have the capacity to rate all

2,500 video titles that come to market annually.

Roughly 4,000 to 5,000 video games and discs are already on the market, Heistand said. The ratings board will not go back and rate those.

"To go back and rate those will put such a burden on our process," he said. Heistand said when a new product is marketed, 70 percent of the sales occur in the first three months.

Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., said he was pleased with the industry's plan but would like to see more details on ways companies might be penalized if they violate the rating system.

Retailers, including Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and Barnes & Noble, promised to carry only rated video games.

Games suitable for all ages are labeled "GA," for general audience. Those labeled "MA-13" are most appropriate for children 13 and older, and an "MA-17" label is for users 17 and older.

Ed Volkwein, Sega's senior vice president of marketing, said about 90 percent of Sega's games are labeled "GA," 7 percent are "MA-13" and 3 percent are "MA-17."

Japan curbs anger over U.S. trade law

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese industrialists and commentators denounced President Clinton as a bully and an enemy of free trade for his decision to revive a tough provision of U.S. trade law.

But the government on Friday played down the likelihood of a trade war.

Washington hasn't imposed any sanctions on Tokyo, so Japan's strategy has been to play it cool and work behind the scenes on a package of convincing market-opening measures.

"This is just a kind of procedure. People talk as if Japan is being singled out, but (it applies) to all countries," said Foreign Minister Tetsuhiro Hata of the "Super 301" law re-imposed by Clinton.

Super 301 calls for targeting any country judged to be an unfair trader. U.S. officials have made it clear they intend to use the law to reduce Japan's $59 billion trade surplus with the United States.

Secretary of State Warren Christopher left Friday for Asia, with a stop in Japan scheduled between visits to Vietnam, Australia, China and Vladivostok, Russia.

Before leaving, Christopher said relations with Japan were safe, at least for now.

In a television interview, Hata reiterated Tokyo's promise to come up with market-opening steps by the end of the month. And he welcomed reports that some businesses are preparing to announce stepped-up purchases of American goods, such as auto parts.

Jobs

As retailers rebounded from post-holiday layoffs, construction gained slightly with the mild weather and the recreational sector benefited from late snow storms.

"Most industries across the state expanded an increase in employment levels during February," analysts said. "Although some areas of growth were small, they continued to reflect the positive condition of Idaho's economy."

Although Idaho's jobless rate rose to a point while the national rate dropped by the same amount, the Idaho rate was still 1.7 percentage points below the national rate, marking the ninth straight-month state unemployment has run below the country's.

The January rate of 5.3 percent, which was delayed for a month because of the calculation revisions, was the lowest since June 1989. The modest increase in unemployment last month was caused by workers joining the labor force faster than the economic can generate new jobs.

Although the figures are suspect, the department said there were 551,000 Idahoans on the job in January, up 30,000 from December. Another 9,200 workers found job in February to push that total over 560,000 but the labor force grew by 10,700 to explain the rise in the unemployment rate.

The state finished 1993 with an average jobless rate of 6.2 percent. Average employment was a record 512,000.

Analysts predicted in early January that the average jobless rate would drop another notch in 1994 as unemployment remains relatively static because even one of the nation's fastest-growing economies cannot produce jobs fast enough to keep up with the influx of people drawn by prospects of better opportunities.

Shutdown

Other senior water-rights holders will be forced to make their own calls, and before long thousands upon thousands of water-rights in southern Idaho would become entangled in a mammoth legal battle.

The legislation may force a step in any try to impose a solution, House Majority Leader Bruce Newcomb said.

"The first call for water will be the first call for a special session," said Newcomb, a Burley Republican who farms in Cassia County.

The Legislature may have a role to play in any agreement, state Sen. Laird Noh said, but there isn't much it can do unless and until the attorneys for the various parties agree among themselves on a settlement.

Several legislative bills with water law provisions were introduced Friday afternoon to go over the ramifications of the Mussler decision and see if some agreement could be reached under which the call would not be made.

John Hepworth, the Twin Falls attorney who represented the Musslers and Newcomb, said any such agreement would have to include a total moratorium on new withdrawals of water from the aquifer.

"There is simply more water being taken out of the bathtub, as it were, than is being put back in the bathtub," Hepworth said. "That's apparent to anyone who's studied the issue."

But Higginson, under questioning from the lawmakers, would not say the aquifer was overappropriated or even fully appropriated, even though it is being drawn down by some 500,000 acre-feet a year.

"It is out of balance, but it's out of balance for a number of factors, not just of them six years of drought," he said.

Other elements of an agreement could include:

- Some sort of compensation fund — of water, money or both — for right holders who are injured by the pumping of junior right holders.
- An artificial recharge program for the aquifer.
- Slowing down the process of adopting rules to govern the conjunctive management of surface water and groundwater.

Failure to reach an agreement would directly affect Tom Ambrose, a former bankruptcy lawyer who now farms several thousand acres in Gooding and Blaine counties.

Ambrose probably would be among the first pumps to be shut off if a call for water is made, but he told lawmakers Friday that he wouldn't be the last.

"If something doesn't happen to blunt the effect of this decision, I'm going to start practicing law again," Ambrose said. "There's going to be a bigger call for bankruptcy lawyers than water lawyers."

Dry, mild conditions prevail over most of nation

The Associated Press

With the exception of some light snow in New England and a few showers in the Pacific Northwest, it was dry and mild for much of the nation Friday.

A broad upper-level ridge of high pressure provided fair skies across most of the country beginning. Sunshine and low humidity allowed for rapid warming through the morning hours.

Afternoon temperatures reached the 60s and 70s across Southern California, the southern Plateau, the southern Rockies, the southern and central Plains, the lower Mississippi and Ohio valleys, the south Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and the Florida Peninsula.

Senate majority leader Mitchell will not run for re-election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine announced Friday he will not be a candidate for re-election this year.

The surprise decision will complicate the Democratic Party's efforts to hold control of the Senate.

Mitchell purchased time on Maine television stations to make the announcement Friday night, and in a statement released by his office said it was simply time to pursue other challenges after 14 years in the Senate.

Mitchell

"I'm certain that if I'd run, I'd have been re-elected," Mitchell said.

league baseball.

In his announcement, he said he would miss the Senate and promised to dedicate his final months to passage of health care reform, a crime bill, welfare reform, campaign finance reform and efforts to protect jobs at Maine's shipyards and fisheries.

In his announcement, Mitchell paid tribute to his mentor, former senator and secretary of state Edmund Muskie. And he said he got his political compass from his parents: "No one in America should be guaranteed success. But everyone should have a fair chance to succeed."

President Clinton said at a White House news conference that Mitchell will be "very difficult to replace."

Clinton said Mitchell told him of his decision at dinner Thursday night.

"He is a wonderful man," the president said. "He has made a very personal decision. I will miss him a lot and America is very deeply in his debt."

Whether Republicans would see it that way is unclear. As majority leader, he was often at odds with President Bush's White House, and Republicans complained again and again that he was using the Senate's arcane rules to block Bush's initiatives. In a recent interview, Bush himself complained about Mitchell's partisanship.

"I don't make too much of that," the senator said in a recent interview.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said in Annapolis, Md., that he hadn't heard of Mitchell's decision, but said of his colleague: "We may not agree on everything, but we've worked together. His word is always good. ... He's done an outstanding job as a majority leader."

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., said Mitchell "had a wonderful range of intellect. He was very partisan but he was very fair. ... I never doubted his word."

Mitchell briefed his staff at 2:15 p.m. in the Capitol. On the way into the meeting he had no comment except to say "I'm on my way to Maine."

U.S. troops closer to trip to Bosnia

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — President Clinton's recent initiatives in Bosnia have paved the way for sending up to 30,000 ground troops to the war-ravaged region.

Clinton has pledged to send U.S. soldiers as part of a United Nations peace-keeping force if the three warring factions in Bosnia reach a peace agreement.

The president's deep involvement in the peace process over the past month has improved the odds of an agreement — and greatly increased U.S. responsibility for what happens next, analysts say.

"It seems to me we have taken on a moral burden that we did not have before, and it would be hard not to do it," said Brent Scowcroft, who was national security adviser to former President George Bush.

If U.S. troops go in, military leaders say some are likely to be killed. That prospect prompts nightmare comparisons to Somalia, and even Vietnam.

"The United States will have made a terrible, terrible mistake if American ground forces end up in Bosnia in any way," said Robert Gates, former director of the Central Intelligence Agency, in an interview.

Leading lawmakers, both Republicans and Democrats, say neither Congress nor the country is ready to follow Clinton's lead in sending troops to Bosnia.

"It would not be an easy sell up here on Capitol Hill," said Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

Keeping a force of 25,000 U.S. soldiers in Bosnia for two years would require troop rotations and thus tie up two full U.S. Army divisions — 20 percent of the standing army, Nunn said.

That, he said, might spread U.S. military resources too thin and invite the kind of regional war that we hope to deter in other hot spots, such as North Korea or Iraq.

Nevertheless, Nunn said, if NATO commits to sending a big peace-keeping force into Bosnia, "it would be very hard for us not to participate."

Exactly how many U.S. troops would be needed is unclear. Defense Secretary William Perry confirmed this week that an initial plan called for 50,000 NATO troops, half of them Americans. But fewer might be needed, Perry said, depending on terms of a final agreement.

Gen. David M. Maddox, commander of U.S. Army forces in Europe, has been planning to use 20,000 to 30,000 U.S. troops. "I ain't goin' in with two squads," he said. "My serious concern is force protection."

Before troops could be sent, Congress would have to give its approval — a condition Clinton accepts.

Rock star in coma after drug overdose

ROME (AP) — Kurt Cobain, lead singer of the Seattle-based rock group Nirvana, went into a coma Friday following an overdose of powerful sedatives washed down with alcohol, but appeared to be recovering.

Cobain was not fully out of the coma late Friday, but showed signs of increased consciousness, a spokeswoman for the singer said. "He's very responsive and it looks good," said Janet Billig, a spokeswoman for his New York-based management company, Gold Mountain Entertainment. "His eyes are open and he's moving his hands."

Cobain "suffered a complete collapse due to fatigue and severe influenza" and "went into a coma after mixing the pills and alcohol," said a statement from Nirvana's record company, the New York-based David Geffen Co.

Space Shuttle Columbia blasts off Friday morning for a 14-day scientific mission.

Skies clear and wind dies for Columbia's 16th flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia soared through a clear sky and slipped into orbit Friday with five astronauts who will oversee the kind of projects planned later this decade for a space station.

"See you in half a month," shuttle commander John Casper said.

The four men and one woman, all space veterans, quickly began engineering and materials experiments and prepared the shuttle robot arm for upcoming magnetic tests.

NASA savored the right-on-the-mark launch, the second one this year. Mission managers delayed the flight one day because of dangerously high wind Thursday, but the weather was ideal when the sun rose Friday.

"It was especially gratifying coming after last year's dismal shuttle launch record. NASA struggled through 10 launch scrubs in 1993, including two engine shutdowns at the pad — the first in eight years."

The only thing out of the ordinary

Friday was NASA's decision to keep the two booster-recovery ships in port until after launch because of rough seas.

NASA solicited the Coast Guard, Navy and Air Force to keep an eye on Columbia's 149-foot-long solid rocket boosters floating in the Atlantic Ocean, and keep unsuspecting boats away, until the ships can reach the boosters today.

NASA's oldest shuttle is making its 16th flight and the 61st of the shuttle program. Columbia already holds the record for the longest shuttle excursion — just an hour longer than this scheduled 13-day, 23-hour voyage — but the crew is hoping to surpass that with a landing delay. One extra orbit will do it.

Columbia holds more engineering and technology experiments than have ever flown on a shuttle before, said Jack Levine, director of flight programs for NASA's Office of Advanced Concepts and Technology.

The 11 primary experiments, worth nearly $100 million, range from semiconductor production to metal melting to electric arcing — the kind of work planned for an international space station to be built beginning in 1997.

Nearly all the major experiments will be operated from the ground. As a result, the astronauts will occupy themselves with medical tests, a new magnetic grapping system for the shuttle robot arm, and small, snap-together structures that will be shaken to see how the pieces hold up under stress. Space station planners are particularly interested in the latter results.

The astronauts will watch over 12 rats that are part of a bone and immune system study. They also will lower Columbia's orbit from the present 184 miles to 120 miles by flight's end so scientists can see how their experiments fare at different altitudes.

4 Muslim terrorists convicted in World Trade Center bombing

NEW YORK (AP) — To a shout of "Injustice!" four Muslim extremists were convicted Friday in the World Trade Center bombing.

The government failed the verdict as an unmistakable message that terrorists can't get away with it in America.

"Islam is coming back!" cried defendant Nidal Ayyad, glaring at the jury as he pronounced the four men guilty on all charges. "Injustice!" shouted defendant, Mohammed Salameh, pounding on the defense table.

The defendants face life in prison without parole when sentenced by U.S. District Judge Kevin Duffy on May 4.

"They should be executed," said Walter Stokes, 47, who was among those injured in the blast. "There wasn't enough penalties for them."

The anonymous federal jury returned the verdicts on the sixth day of deliberations, and a year and six days after the blast that killed six people, injured more than 1,000 and shattered Americans' confidence that terrorism was a foreign problem.

"The signal should go out across the world that anyone who seeks to come into this country to practice terrorism will have the full weight of law enforcement brought against them," President Clinton said.

The verdict "should send a clear and unmistakable message that we will not tolerate terrorism in this country," said U.S. Attorney Mary Jo White, whose office prosecuted the case.

After the verdicts, the State Department warned Americans overseas of possible attacks by Islamic extremists.

The verdicts — on conspiracy, assault and various explosives charges — came on the Muslim Sabbath and during Ramadan, the holy month of daytime fasting.

As the jury forewoman repeatedly said "guilty," Salameh shook his head dejectedly. Defendant Ahmad Ajaj appeared to smile in wonderment, then joined a chant of "Allahu Akbar!" — Arabic for "God is Great!"

Salameh, a 26-year-old Palestinian, was accused of helping bankroll the attack, building the bomb and renting the van that carried it into the trade center's underground parking garage.

Prosecutors said Ayyad, a 26-year-old chemist, ordered chemicals for the bomb and later told news organizations the motive: to protest U.S. aid to Israel.

Witnesses said Mahmud Abouhalima, 34, frequented the apartment where the bomb was built, while Ajaj, 28, provided bomb-making expertise. Ajaj was in jail on a false-passport conviction when the blast occurred.

Safety agency probes minivans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's traffic safety agency has upgraded an investigation into reports that the rear hatch of Chrysler minivans popped open during accidents that killed eight people.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, in its monthly defect investigation report, said Friday it had received reports of 13 accidents involving nine injuries and eight fatalities in the 1984-94 Voyager, Caravan and Town and Country. The rear lift-gate, latching mechanism released on impact, the agency said.

About 4 million of the minivans are on the road.

The government said Chrysler earlier replaced 4,184 latches for binding and sticking problems.

"We do not believe there is any problem with the latch mechanism," said Chrysler spokesman Tom Kowalski. "Our minivans have had an exemplary safety record."

Nussbaum resignation is expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Under fire for White House handling of the Whitewater land deal, counsel Bernard Nussbaum is expected to resign Friday.

One senior official said his departure was now only "a matter of timing."

The president twice passed up opportunities to publicly defend Nussbaum, then met privately with him in the Oval Office late in the day.

"I have nothing to say," Clinton responded tersely when asked if Nussbaum should quit. Nussbaum's fate clouded after the latest in a series of White House missteps linked to his office.

A senior official who spoke on condition of anonymity said Nussbaum's resignation was "just a matter of timing."

The latest flare-up came over word that White House aides — including Nussbaum — met privately with Treasury officials to discuss the federal inquiry into a failed Arkansas thrift with ties to the Clintons.

Clinton said Thursday it would have been "better if the meetings and conversations hadn't occurred," and aides said privately the president was particularly upset with Nussbaum.

The scrappy, 57-year-old New Yorker has been associated with some of the biggest blowups of the Clinton White House.

There was the fits-and-starts search for an attorney general after Zoe Baird withdrew, the doomed nomination of Lani Guinier to a top Justice Department job, the abrupt firing — later reversed — of the White House travel office staff, the handling of sensitive papers after the suicide of deputy counsel Vince Foster.

To one extent or another, Nussbaum was involved in all.

And now, there are recurring questions about the political hot potato of Whitewater, an Arkansas land deal the Clintons invested in during the 1980s. A special counsel is probing the failure of Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan Association and whether Whitewater investors benefited from questionable Madison transactions.

Nussbaum did not return telephone calls seeking comment.

Nussbaum last week expressed frustration about backbiting within the White House but said he took some solace in reading a biography of John F. Kennedy that showed "they had a lot of problems, too," recounted Leonard Garment, a Washington lawyer and acquaintance of Nussbaum's.

Administration critics are harsh in their judgments of Nussbaum.

"I don't think he's serving the president very well," said Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole.

"I think what we see here is a total pattern of deceit, of obfuscation, an attempt to keep... the facts and the truth," said Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y.

Nussbaum's supporters, however, see a talented, hard-working lawyer whose successes go unheralded while he catches blame for problems sometimes beyond his control.

On one point, all sides agree: Nussbaum survived this long on the trust of the only two people who really count — Bill and Hillary Clinton.

Christopher visits Asia despite area problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — The arrest of China's top dissident and new tension over trade with Japan clouded U.S. dealings with Asia Friday, as Secretary of State Warren Christopher set out on a week-long trip to the region.

President Clinton criticized China's crackdown on dissidents as "not helpful to our relations."

The State Department said the arrest of Wei Jingsheng and four other dissidents the day of Christopher's departure from Washington casts a pall over his planned visit to Beijing next weekend.

A human-rights group called on Christopher to protest the arrests by postponing his visit. State Department spokeswoman Christine Shelly would not say whether that was being considered, but she said the department sent an urgent request for information on Wei's status and Christopher expects a response.

Christopher left only 24 hours after President Clinton signed an executive order that turns up the pressure on Japan to reduce the $59.3 billion trade gap between the two countries.

Christopher was spending the night in Hawaii and is to arrive in Canberra, Australia, Monday and then go on to Tokyo and Beijing later in the week. He plans a final stop in Vladivostok on Russia's Pacific side, for a meeting with Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev.

Ascending index buoys confidence

Index of leading indicators

Seasonally adjusted index, 1987=100

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — The 0.3 percent rise in the index of leading economic indicators reported Friday for January points to economic growth continuing for at least the next six months, analysts said.

The report gives "no signs of any kind of economic downturn on the horizon," said Stuart Hoffman, vice president and chief economist at PNC Financial Corp., noting that the index has "been on a nice uptrend" since last summer.

The index was at 100.5 in January compared with 100 in 1987. The index was up 0.7 percent in December. It was the sixth consecutive increase in the index, the longest string of gains since February to August 1987.

Eight of the components of the leading index for January pointed to future economic growth, while two were negative and one was unchanged.

'Given that it's rising so fast, it does indicate that the economy is well on track.'

— Peter D'Antonio, Citicorp economist

The two negative components — initial weekly unemployment claims and building permits — were affected by January's severe winter weather, analysts had said before the report.

Peter D'Antonio, an economist with Citicorp's North American Investment Bank, said the index has been rising at an annual rate of more than 5 percent in recent months, the fastest clip in 10 years.

"Given that it's rising so fast, it does indicate that the economy is well on track," he said.

Economists said the index's January increase probably would have been bigger if not for the bad weather. Friday's report showed that "the economy is still witnessing quite good growth" despite the weather, said Shearson Lehman economist Stan Shipley.

Analysts added that the continuing increases in sensitive materials prices, which posted their fourth straight rise, is nothing to be concerned about. The gains in commodity prices had already been reported. Moreover, Shipley added, the increase is a sign of economic growth rather than future inflation.

Mike Niemira, manager of economic research at Mitsubishi Bank, said he expects gains in the index in the 0.3 to 0.4 percent range in coming months.

However, Robert Diehl, economist with the Northern Trust, said the index may post a decline in February as a result of drops in the average workweek and stock market.

Bills to free up cable, phone firms advance

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Members of the House Energy and Commerce and Judiciary committees are optimistic about swift passage of telecommunications deregulation bills, and some plan to meet privately next week to try to resolve remaining issues.

The committees intend to vote on the two measures the week of March 14 and hope to bring the legislation to the House floor for Congress returns in mid-April from their winter recess. The Senate is holding hearings on a companion bill.

The House bills, both extremely complex, were the result of months of negotiations between warring parties. Committee members and lobbyists said the chairman of the key panels hope to work out differences before the public committee meetings to prevent any changes that could disrupt the balance designed to give each major faction enough to win support.

Given the enormous impact they could have on the $300 billion telecommunications industry, the bills have run into little strong opposition. That's due, in part, to the fact that most players gain something, and because court decisions, mergers and alliances already are altering the industry landscape.

One bill would let the regional telephone companies into the long-distance business. Both the Judiciary and Commerce committees must vote on the measure.

Idaho Lobbyist says center too liberal

BOISE. (AP) — A lobbyist for University of Idaho student government is urging the Legislature to cut funding for the school's Women's Center, which he calls a "political organization supplying programs for homosexuals."

University of Idaho Vice President Hal Godwin is worried the lobbying by Daniel Whiting could jeopardize the center's funding as the Joint Finance Appropriations Committee drafts its higher education budget.

"To me, it's just a shame he has taken the focus off the needs of higher education," Godwin said.

But the issue never surfaced Friday when budget writers agreed to give the four colleges $3.1 million more than Gov. Cecil Andrus recommended.

"In a letter to budget committee members, Whiting said the Women's Center gets about $50,000 a year to finance an agenda 'strictly on the left side of the political spectrum.'"

The center has provided office space and a phone to a homosexual student group, refused to print anti-abortion material in its newsletter, shown a film about gay, black men and featured lectures by "bleeding heart liberals" in the past two years.

They also have opposed the Idaho Citizen Alliance's anti-gay initiative and advertised meetings of a lesbian supper club, Whiting maintained.

"I am not asking you to force the Women's Center to stop advocating their political view," he wrote. "I am asking you to stop forcing Idaho taxpayers to support political organizations."

Whiting said he told legislators he is not acting in his capacity as the student lobbyist on the issue.

"I have tried to get them (school officials) to do something about it for two years, but they haven't," Whiting said. "I figured this is my last chance."

But Godwin said he has never received a formal complaint from Whiting about the center, although he has talked informally with him.

Godwin said the salaries and fringe benefits of center director Betsy Thomas and a secretary total about $50,000 and are part of the budget of Student Advisory Services.

Godwin defended the center's diversity of programs, ranging from rape education to working with the health center.

McWilliam appointed to Ed Board

BOISE (AP) — Gov. Cecil Andrus appointed Pocatello High School Principal Carole McWilliam to the state Board of Education, calling for the board use her expertise to get more involved with Idaho's public schools.

McWilliam succeeds 10-year Board of Education member Diane Blyeu of Pocatello, whose term expired Tuesday.

Friday's appointment was Andrus' second to the Board of Education in four days. He named Coeur d'Alene businesswoman Judith Cota Mayor on Tuesday to succeed Roberta Fields of New Meadows. She also had served 10 years.

Both appointments are subject to state Senate confirmation.

McWilliam, 54, has worked in public education for more than 30 years and has been principal at Pocatello High School since 1984. She previously was a junior high principal, an adjunct professor at Idaho State University, and a secondary school teacher in Idaho, Utah, California and Pennsylvania.

The governor said he had three finalists to succeed Blyeu. The others were Pocatello High School English teacher Ronda Black, the wife of Democratic state Rep. Pete Black, and Beattie Katsilometes, an Idaho State University administrator and the wife of Bannock County Commission Chairman Tom Katsilometes. He eventually settled on McWilliam.

Jazz fest sales drop

MOSCOW (AP) — The director of the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival at the University of Idaho is calling this year's musical gala a tremendous success, although ticket sales were 15 percent lower than last year.

"One of the reasons that ticket sales are down this year is that we had a lot of volunteers," Lynn Skinner said. Each volunteer receives a complimentary ticket for the Wednesday night concert and earns additional tickets for each eight hours of work logged.

Jerome arrests 2 men on charges of burglary

JEROME — Two Jerome men have been arrested by both Twin Falls and Jerome. Travis Wade Sherer, 18, was arrested in Jerome Thursday night as he bonded out of the Twin Falls jail. Jason R. Dilka, 18, was arrested in Jerome Friday. Both were charged with two felony counts of burglary. They had been arrested in Twin Falls when police found them with beer, guns and stolen property. They were charged with grand theft and possession of stolen property.

Gerald Brant, Jerome detective, said stolen goods recovered included a cellular phone and a box of shells taken from one vehicle and emergency keys from another car. Dilka is being held in the Jerome County jail on a $1,500 bond. Sherer was released on his own recognizance with an electronic monitor. A public defender was appointed for each man.

Group collects 20 signatures toward Southwick recall

SHOSHONE — Opponents of Lincoln County Sheriff Steve Southwick have passed the first step in their efforts to recall Southwick.

Following an organizational meeting Thursday night to begin the recall, organizer Rusty Gillette said he'd turned in the first 20 signatures to get the effort recognized by the county clerk. Gillette said he now has 30 people circulating recall petitions. To get a recall of Southwick on the May 24 ballot, Gillette needs 397 more signatures on his petitions filed by April 10.

He said most of Southwick's opponents are upset the sheriff has sued to block a regional enhanced 911 emergency calling system for the Magic Valley.

Vandals target restrooms, trash at 3 Twin Falls parks

TWIN FALLS — Vandals burned a toilet at Shoshone Falls and caused other damage at city parks Thursday night.

Twin Falls Parks employees arrived at work Friday morning at Shoshone Falls and found a portable toilet had been burned to the ground, according to the reports filed with the Twin Falls Police Department.

Park employees also found the chain across the road at Dierkes Park cut and a garbage Dumpster tipped over and trash across the park road. Vandals also used spray paint on restrooms at Centennial Park.

$17,000 engine analyzer stolen from car dealership

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls Police are investigating a burglary at Gary's Westland Hyundai where a computerized automotive engine analyzer was stolen.

Westland employees arrived at work Friday morning to find the analyzer and its computer parts missing. The doors of the parts department at 1070 Blue Lakes Blvd. N. were locked, but one door appeared to have been pried open. The equipment stolen is valued at $17,000.

Magistrate to discuss courts at county Democratic meet

TWIN FALLS — Fifth District Magistrate Barry Wood will address the Twin Falls County Democratic Party next week about the Idaho courts system.

The Democrats will meet at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the Obichain Insurance Community Room at 264 Main Avenue South.

Kimberly council to appoint replacement for mayor

KIMBERLY — The City Council will appoint a new mayor next week. The council will replace former Mayor Jesse Posey, who retired last month in the middle of his term.

As of Friday, the city has received three applications from residents willing to serve the remainder of Posey's term, which runs until January 1, 1996, according to Deputy City Clerk Nina West.

Kimberly residents Oliver Bibby and Betty Murray are both asking for the position. Police Commissioner and City Councilman George McAdams has also applied.

The mayoral appointment will be made during the City Council's next regular meeting, set for 7 p.m. Tuesday at the City Hall.

Unclear how much county cash gone

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — "No one knows for sure how much money is missing from the county clerk's office, if any is missing at all."

Twin Falls County Clerk Bob Fort said again Friday that he "cannot confirm nor deny" that any wrongdoing has occurred in his office.

Even Lisa Barini-Garcia, the attorney representing one county employee accused of failing to report missing funds during the past three years, does not know how much money is missing.

"I asked (Fort) and he wouldn't tell me," Barini-Garcia said Friday.

Fort also has not specified what funds are missing, she said.

On Friday, Fort held a closed-door disciplinary hearing to consider "action in excess of a written warning" for a deputy clerk of the court.

The employee has the opportunity in that hearing to give her position and to offer reasons why the county should forgo disciplinary action.

Barini-Garcia said that her client was not allowed to have witnesses testify on her behalf during the one-hour hearing.

Documents were presented that showed missing amounts of money, but access to "the paper trail" was not provided to show how much money was missing or where that money was missing from, she said.

"We could be talking $200 or $2,000," she said.

Steve Hopkins, a senior special agent with the Idaho Bureau of Investigations, confirmed that the bureau has been called in to examine the county clerk's office.

"We are conducting an investigation down there (in Twin Falls)," Hopkins said Friday.

He declined to comment on the extent of the FBI investigation.

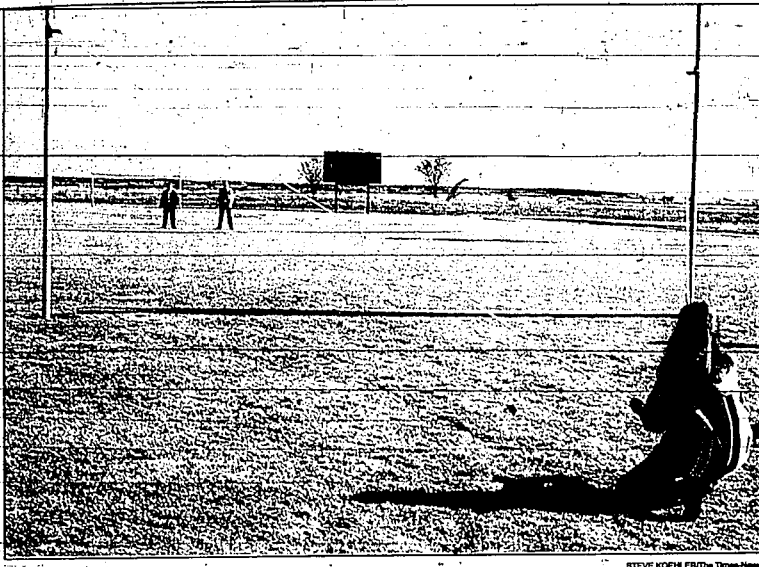

"You'll have to ask the county prosecutor's office. They are the agency that asked us to get involved," he said.

Twin Falls County Prosecuting Attorney G. Richard Bevan said he still could not comment on how much money is involved in the clerk's investigation.

Fort will decide now whether or not to take any disciplinary action, Bevan said.

"It's under advisement with Bob (Fort)," he said.

Such disciplinary action would be taken by next week, Fort said.

Wendell students test laws of physics with giant slingshot, water balloons

By Steve Koehler
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Launching water balloons from a giant slingshot made physics come alive for a Wendell High School class after students finished their book learning.

"We've studied the theory. We've done it on paper. This is the applied," said physics instructor Mary Shane.

Water balloons were launched from a slingshot made with 62 feet of braided surgical tubing tied with nylon ropes to the goal posts at one end of the football field. A nylon fabric pouch in the middle of the slingshot held the water balloons.

"The balloons sailed most of the length of the football field. The longest shot was 267 feet and traveled 2.43 seconds, which equals about 75 mph."

Dave Fisher, city policeman, was at the launch site with a patrol car to measure the speed of the balloons by radar, but the balloons were too small to detect.

The class calculated the speed after measuring balloon travel time and distance with stopwatch and a tape.

Some balloons stuck in the launch pouch and didn't go anywhere. A few of those that stuck broke free on the rebound of the slingshot and sprayed the launch person with water.

Like most experiments, students and teacher learned by doing and making adjustments along the way.

CSI among beneficiaries if bill to link schools through hi-tech means passes

By Drew DeSilver

BOISE — The College of Southern Idaho, already a leader among Idaho colleges and universities in using high technology, would be able to do even more under a educational technology initiative unveiled Friday.

"The initiative, spearheaded by Rep. Pam Ahrens, R-Boise, would spend $14.1 million to link schools, colleges, universities, and libraries with computer lines, microwave satellite systems, and other "learning technologies."

It also would expand the use of computers and televised courses in public schools, and train teachers how to use the technology effectively.

A 15-member council representing educators, administrators, business, the Legislature and the general public would be set up to coordinate the effort, in order to minimize waste and duplication. "I really believe this could be our legacy for this legislative session," Ahrens said. It not only would be a wise investment for the future, she said, but would address one of the key issues in the ongoing school-funding lawsuit.

Of the entire program, $10.4 million is earmarked for public school technology grants and $1.2 million for teacher training.

One-time spending accounts for $10.2 million of the initiative's price tag, Ahrens said.

The remaining $3.9 million in ongoing money would fund school technology grants, teacher training and agricultural Extension courses via interactive television.

'I really believe this could be our legacy for this legislative session.'

— Rep. Pam Ahrens

CSI already beams courses to its branch campuses in Gooding, Hailey and Burley, allowing students who can't come to Twin Falls to continue their education via two-way TV.

But the technology initiative would greatly expand CSI's capacity for such "distance learning," said Jerry Beck, the college's vice president of instruction.

Here are some of the proposal's highlights:

- $456,300 to add a second channel to the state's microwave system, which links Coeur d'Alene, Moscow, Lewiston, Boise, Twin Falls, Pocatello and Idaho Falls. That Beck said, would double the number of courses CSI could receive from Idaho State University or Boise State University.

- $300,000 would be used for a dedicated microwave link between Boise and CSI. The way the current system is set up, whenever a video class is sent between Boise and Twin Falls, it blocks transmissions between Boise and eastern Idaho. The dedicated line would solve that problem.

- $190,000 to link the University of Idaho's Boise center to the statewide microwave system. That would enable CSI students to take teacher-training classes through TV without leaving Twin Falls.

- $80,000 for CSI to use its high-tech experience to redesign classrooms to make the best use of two-way TV and other educational technology.

The school technology grants will provide more money for CSI's plan to build interactive learning links with 14 high schools, hospitals and clinics in the Magic Valley.

Making more and better use of advanced telecommunications will help students pressed for time and money, Beck said.

"We're getting more and more students who have to make quicker gains to survive in college," he said.

"Everything we can do to enhance that hour of classroom experience, the better off everyone will be."

A bill to set up the council on educational technology was introduced Friday by the House Education Committee, and sent immediately to the full House for consideration.

The joint House-Senate budget committee probably will take up the spending component of the initiative next week.

2nd suspect pleads guilty in suffocation

The Associated Press

MOUNTAIN HOME — Sentencing is scheduled April 22 for William C. Schuller II, who pleaded guilty to compounding a felony for his role in last fall's suffocation murder of an elderly Mountain Home woman.

Schuller, 20, who was arraigned Friday before 4th District Judge Robert Rowett, faces one to five years in prison. His sentencing is scheduled the same day as David O. Nelson, 45, who earlier pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit first-degree murder.

Nelson admitted smothering Velma M. Hartley, 84, as she slept last Sept. 23. Schuller and Kimberly Bennett, 19, who is Hartley's granddaughter, were accused of going to Hartley's home to make sure she was sleeping that night.

Bennett faces a charge of conspiracy to commit first-degree murder. Her mother, Muriel K. Banes, 45, faces either conspiracy to commit murder or aiding and abetting murder. Elmore County Prosecutor Barbara Layher said.

Both also face forgery charges for allegedly cashing checks in Hartley's name after her slaying. They have pleaded innocent and are scheduled to stand trial starting May 3.

Prosecutors allege Banes paid Nelson $500 to kill her mother, whose body was found by fishermen 27 miles east of Mountain Home and 10 miles north of Glenns Ferry on Oct. 9.

Banes, Bennett and Nelson remain without bond in the Elmore County Jail. Schuller remains free on $5,000 bond.

Squabble might cost CSI money

The Associated Press

BOISE — The College of Southern Idaho faced relatively poorly in the Legislature Friday — the apparent victim of an internal political squabble on the House Appropriations Committee.

Gov. Cecil Andrus had recommended raising state contributions to the operation of community colleges in Twin Falls and Coeur d'Alene by $800,000 to $9.7 million for the coming academic year.

Officials at CSI and North Idaho College had sought an increase of $1.2 million to $10.1 million. The schools receive the bulk of the financial support from local property taxes and student fees.

Rep. Maxine Bell, R-Jerome, and Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, who have consistently voted to hold the line on spending in almost all other areas, joined forces behind a plan adding $200,000 to the governor's recommendation for a total of $9.9 million.

House Appropriations Committee Chairman Kathleen Gurnsey, R-Boise, who has crossed swords several times with Cameron this winter, offered a plan totalling only $9.6 million. She pointed to multimillion-dollar campus construction projects at the two schools that have already been authorized along with additional faculty in programs in the vocational education budget.

Cameron called that vindictive and petty. Republican Rep. Lynn Loosli of Ashton offered a compromise that, in effect, matched the Andrus proposal. It was about to pass on an 11-9 vote when Bell decided to kill it and changed her vote from "yes" to "no."

The proposal died on a 10-10 vote. The committee then quickly adopted Gurnsey's proposal by 11-9, and Cameron stormed out of the committee room.

The increase over this year's allocation is 8.4 percent.

State aid to public schools, which budget writers will decide next week, is expected to rise by 18 percent.

Jerome educator, Fraley, takes post in state school program

By H.R. Weir
Times-News correspondent

JEROME — Karen Fraley, 11-year veteran educator in the Jerome School District, will turn in her resignation Tuesday.

She has been hired by the state as the "School-to-Work" Coordinator. Fraley was selected from a field of 94 applicants, Superintendent Jim Cobble said.

In her new position Fraley will develop and help to implement a statewide educational program for non-college bound high school students.

This will be a significant change for American schools. We need to do a better job of preparing students to work — their attitudes and principles about work, as well as their academic abilities," Fraley said.

She said she is committed to developing programs for the 75 percent of high school students who don't go on four-year college degrees.

"The School-to-Work movement is just such an effort," she said. Fraley said she would "sit down with the business community and find out what they need and expect from the students they hire. In the private sector they're having trouble finding highly motivated employees."

As Fraley leaves Jerome for her job in Boise, her husband, Jim, a Twin Falls County Commissioner, will complete his term of office, which ends in January 1995, and then take a job in Boise.

"Karen leaving the Jerome school system is definitely a loss to the district, but at the same time we always want our people to continue to improve professionally and personally," Cobble said. "This is certainly a wonderful opportunity for Karen. I'm sure she will make a great impact on the whole state as she has in Jerome."

Fraley has worn many hats in the Jerome School District. She oversees preparation and administration of grant-funded programs. A job she will also have in her state position.

Fraley also was the main driver in starting the successful Twin Falls Alternative High School and remains on the Board of Directors. In 1992, she started and remains the administrator of the Northside Alternative High School in Jerome.

Superintendent bill hits snag

By Drew DeSilver
Times-News writer

BOISE — A bill intended to allow people other than school administrators to run for the job of state superintendent of public instruction hit a snag Friday in the Idaho House.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Patie Nafziger, D-Ketchum, would require candidates for the state job to have a four-year bachelor's degree from an accredited college or university and be "actively engaged in educational work in the state."

Under current law, candidates for state superintendent must hold a valid administrators' certificate, effectively limiting the pool of potential candidates to principals, superintendents and other administrators.

According to the state Department of Education, just 1,780 people now hold administrators' certificates. Few lawmakers Friday questioned the desirability of broadening the requirements for the state superintendent's job. Indeed, similar bills have passed the House overwhelmingly in recent years.

But several Republicans said Nafziger's bill didn't define "educational work," raising questions about who would be qualified to run for superintendent. They also asked why the bill was written to take effect immediately, rather than July 1 with most bills.

House Majority Leader Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, said that provision "smacks of a political move of some sort."

Newcomb and others proposed setting the bill aside so it could be amended to define "educational work" and remove the so-called "emergency clause."

But Rep. Clint Stennett, D-Ketchum, opposed that motion, saying it was important the pool of potential candidates be expanded this year, when a new superintendent will be elected.

Jerry Evans, who has held the job since 1978, announced last month he would not seek re-election.

The two announced candidates to succeed Evans are both Republicans and both former district superintendents.

By limiting the number of people who can run for this job, what we'll be doing is... continue going down the same road we've been going down the last 20 years," he said.

"We're not going to change that by electing someone who's grown up in the system. We need a fresh outlook in this position. We need someone who's going to ask 'Why? Why are we doing things this way?'"

Rep. Mark Stubbs, R-Twin Falls, said he liked the bill the way it was.

Noting Evans' long tenure, Stubbs said "whoever we elect this upcoming election has a good chance of being there for a long time. We ought to crack this thing open."

But the House voted 41-27 to set the bill aside for amendments. All 41 "yes" votes were from Republicans; the 20 House Democrats were joined by seven Republicans in voting against the measure.

Student threatened for favoring rights for gay club

COEUR D'ALENE (AP) — A freshman at North Idaho College says he has received death threats for speaking up in favor of the rights of gay students to form a campus club.

Rollie Jurgens, acting president at the college, said campus security will try to get more information about the harassment.

The student told The Spokesman-Review newspaper in Spokane, Wash., about the incidents on the condition his name not be published.

The student said a note stuck to the steering wheel of his car said "Back off ASSNIC or you'll die." ASSNIC is the Associated Students of North Idaho College, the student governing organization.

LaRocco, Leroy spar City can take land for road

BOISE (AP) — Republican challenger David Leroy questioned Democratic Congressman LaRocco's use of his free mailing privilege to distribute a position paper on the Endangered Species Act last month.

But LaRocco said Friday that Leroy, the former lieutenant governor and attorney general, was only playing politics. He dismissed allegations that the mailing was anything but a legitimate attempt to keep his constituents informed.

In fact, the two-term lawmaker said his office is so careful with the franking privilege, and to comply with House rules, that it returned about $86,000 of a $145,000 mailing budget last year.

LaRocco spokesman Tom Knappenberger said the cost of mailing a four-page position paper to about 20,000 subscribers, mostly civic leaders and others in the 1st Congressional District could not be separated from the office's overall franking costs.

"Among those who received the mailing was Rick Howard of Payette, Leroy said. He considered it unusual since in his view LaRocco has done little to address problems with the Endangered Species Act during his first three years in Congress.

"It should always be possible for a member of Congress to change, improve or explain his or her position," Leroy wrote in a letter to LaRocco dated Friday. "However, in view of your longstanding and obvious opposition to the Endangered Species Act reform, this mailing appears to be a campaign piece which should have been sent at your own expense."

But LaRocco disputed Leroy's claim that he has not been involved. He cited his formation of a working group to consider the problem of endangered and threatened salmon runs, and involvement with federal plans for endangered grizzly bear and wolves.

"This is nothing but politics, pure and simple," the congressman said. Meanwhile, LaRocco said he had drafted a tongue-in-cheek bill aimed at New York Congressman Carolyn Maloney, a first-term Democrat.

Maloney's Northern Rockies Ecosystem Protection Act would designate 15 million acres of wilderness in five states, including nearly all 9 million acres of roadless land in Idaho.

LaRocco's bill, which he said he might propose only as extended remarks in the House record, is called The Wilderness Equity Act of 1994. It would designate Maloney's 14th Congressional District of New York — which includes Manhattan's Upper East Side and Central Park — as wilderness.

The congressman said the bill seeks to redress the imbalance of wilderness designation among the states. While Idaho has about 1 million acres of wilderness, New York has none.

"I've drafted this bill to make a point, and I will send it to the congressman so she is sure to understand the issue," he said. "I've taken the lead in trying to resolve this issue so that the fate of Idaho's natural resources remains with Idahoans."

The congressman has introduced his own bill to set aside 1.26 million additional acres in northern and western Idaho as wilderness while releasing more than 3 million roadless acres for multiple use.

But Leroy called LaRocco's attempt to tweak Maloney on wilderness "a blatant attempt at election-year gimmickry."

BOUNTFUL, Utah (AP) — A 2nd District judge has upheld the City Council's decision to condemn a piece of land that would serve as a road to a new Mormon Temple.

City Manager Tom Hardy said the judge's decision last week would enable the temple to open its doors by fall. The ruling allows city crews to take "immediate occupancy" of a 66-foot-wide right-of-way that will extend the existing road.

Hardy said work on the road should begin in April and be complete by Sept. 1.

The City Council voted 4-1 in December to use its eminent-domain power, saying the land is needed to keep hundreds of cars out of area neighborhoods when the temple opens.

Councilwoman Renee Coot was the only member in opposition. "I don't believe government has the right authority to take private property as an abuse of our power," she said at the time.

The city tried to buy the land from its owner, Ralph Keller, for several months. He wanted $248,000, the city's approval of a subdivision in the area and funding by the city for improvements to the road.

Officials refused and negotiations stalled. "We're still working on the price, but we should have that resolved soon," Hardy said.

The city had proposed to condemn and buy a larger section of Keller's land to the west but instead took just the 66-foot-wide section.

The road will provide a direct route for members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to the building that is under construction on the east bench.

Fighting violence from church

The Rev. Robert Schuller—the man who first conceived of the Crystal Cathedral in Garden Grove, Calif.—is an irrepressible man of vision. He is beyond positive. He is a cross between Moses, who led the Israelites out of slavery, and a wealthy salesman who peddles stuff for the fun of it. And then there's that Schuller grin, at once both warm and calculating.

If you're not careful, he will charm you into believing in yourself—yes, even that. In the half dozen or so times we have encountered each other, both in Minnesota and California, our relationship has gone from suspicion to admiration.

My first encounter with the man was

Clark Morpew
Faith today

B.C.C. — Before the Crystal Cathedral — when I sat in the congregation as television cameras zoomed around the church capturing his image for his "Hour of Power" broadcast.

Wanting to write a column about my experience, I asked to speak with him after worship. A spokesperson told me His Positiveness would call my hotel sometime during the week. The call never came, and I went home with Schuller's grins.

But if you don't have a good reason, you can't stay suspicious of someone forever. The next time I visited California, I took the nickel tour of the Crystal Cathedral, and I came away overwhelmed—I was also impressed with its extensive programs—the place is one-of-a-kind theological and psychological marketplace.

So, Schuller came to Minnesota again last week to promote his latest book, "Power Thoughts: Achieve Your True Potential Through Power Thinking" (HarperCollins Publishers, $20).

As we sat down for a quick interview in the hotel dining room, Schuller began talking about his television program and his role in pulling religions together for action against the evil of the world.

"I'm in the middle," Schuller said. "I'm positive. I'm a humanitarian. And I'd call myself an Evangelical Christian. I can pull together people from all faiths."

This is not idle boasting. Schuller is the man who created Churches United for Global Mission and persuaded pastors from large churches to join with him to attack poverty and hunger around the world. He also headlines seminars on church growth and leadership for pastors and clergy from across the denominational board.

But now he has a new dream. Schuller has invited 200 clergy from Christianity, Judaism and Islam to a conference on violence this May. Speakers and seminars, he hopes, will pull together a plan on how churches can make an impact on the wave of crime and violence that has swept this nation for the past several years.

"We will shift from collisions to coalitions," the sloganizer Schuller says.

The Rev. David Scoates, executive director of Churches United for Global Mission, says those faiths share a common goal and must learn to work together on large social issues.

"We've got these giant footprints of evil that are walking across this nation," said Scoates, who was senior minister of Hennepin Avenue United Methodist Church in Minneapolis before accepting his current post last year. "We've got a crisis that is tearing our nation—and it's across religious lines and racial lines."

Those new projects are just part of Schuller's plan. He is also putting together a college for preachers. And Scoates is hoping to expand missions in Russia and Eastern European countries.

According to Scoates, the Archbishop of Canterbury has announced plans to close 17 churches in London, some of them historic architecture as Christopher Wren. It is not for want of clergy that the churches are being closed. It is for want of worshippers.

Schuller and Scoates will ask the Archbishop of Canterbury to give them some of those beautiful church buildings. Then, they will put a hard-charging preacher in place and bring those dead congregations back to life.

Sure it sounds crazy, but what if it works? That's what I mean—the man is irrepressible. As we walked through the lobby together toward his waiting limo, Schuller waxed philosophical on his reputation. "I don't have to have all the answers, because I have integrity."

Then, the famous Schuller grin, both warm and calculating.

An ecumenical service for Passover

Rev. Brian Thom, above, says this year's Seder Service will be authentic Hebrew. At right, Thom visits with Rabbi Yossi Liebowitz, who will journey to Twin Falls for this year's Seder Service.

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — "Let us celebrate the Exodus from Egypt, God's redemptive liberation of Israel from starving and spiritual misery." Thus begins the Jewish Seder Service, a celebration of Passover.

Those words will be spoken among a group of Christians in Twin Falls later this month, with a rabbi conducting the service.

The Rev. Brian Thom, Episcopal priest at the Twin Falls Church of the Ascension, and Rabbi Yossi Liebowitz of Temple Sinai in Palm Desert, Calif., have joined forces before. When Thom had a church in California, the two shared a pulpit at a Seder Service there.

This year, Liebowitz will make the trip to Twin Falls to celebrate with his friend.

"It's not unusual for Christians to observe the Seder," Thom said, "but the services are usually a combination of both the Jewish and the Christian heritage."

This time, the service will be authentic Hebrew.

Readings will be taken from the Haggadah, which relates the history of the Jews' enslavement in Egypt, subsequent freedom, holy commitment at Mt. Sinai and return to the promised land. The ritual called "Seder" actually means "order."

Seder tickets going fast

The Seder Service at the Twin Falls Church of the Ascension is set to begin at 6:30 p.m. March 23. Cost is $12.50 a person. Seating is limited to 200, and tickets are selling fast.

For more information, call 733-1248 between 1 and 5 p.m. weekdays.

Those who participate in the service at the Episcopal church will partake of a five-course meal, with all of the foods being used to tell a story.

Bitter herbs will be reminders of tears shed. Sweet wine will symbolize freedom—at a bitter cost. The cloths and candles will be ornate and festive. The entire celebration will last about 2½ hours.

In the Jewish synagogue, a Passover celebration is held on Passover Day, March 27 this year, Thom explained. But celebrations will take place for three or four days on either side of that Sunday.

Debbie Andrews is heading up the food committee for the Episcopal church celebration.

Cardinal faced 2 critical points during ordeal of sex charges

By Michael Hirsley
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Cardinal Joseph Bernardin says there were two critical turning points during his "very painful" three-month humiliation as the highest-ranking U.S. Roman Catholic leader to be charged with sexual abuse of a minor.

The strongest negative turn was early and sudden. He termed it "almost instantaneous judgment made by some that I had fallen from grace or had been permanently damaged, even before I had a chance to respond or the legal system had deliberated."

The second turning point was not quite as quick. It began during pretrial "discovery" process, with his lawyers unraveling claims by accuser Steven Cook's attorneys—particularly how his repressed memory of abuse years ago was recently retrieved by a therapist.

It ended Monday, with Cook's voluntary withdrawal of all the charges against the cardinal.

Most important, Bernardin said, the case against him was dropped without any compromise or "deal," and not due to any legal technicality, before there was a trial.

Reporters, photographers and TV crews listened attentively to the cardinal's opening remarks at a press conference in which he prepared to resume his pastoral life free of the shadow of an impending trial.

But by the time the cardinal gave his candid assessment of why he didn't want a trial, even if a jury found him not guilty, his voice was already competing with another form of instantaneous judgment.

Some TV reporters could not wait for the press conference to conclude before beginning "live" standup reports back to their newscasts.

Standing only a few feet from Bernardin, they began chatting even as he was still answering questions.

In one of those answers, he explained why he felt withdrawal of the charges was much better than a trial.

It was not because he was uncertain of the verdict, Bernardin said, but because he was concerned it might still "leave questions in the public's mind as to the jury's deliberations."

During his press conference, the cardinal's anger showed when he denounced as a "travesty" the rush to judgment that "publicly humiliated me before the world."

And his joy was evident as he declared that his first church appearance this week would be at, appropriately, "Our Lady of Victory Church."

But at most other times, he maintained the composure that marked his many public appearances since the sexual abuse charges were filed Nov. 12 in federal court in Cincinnati. Bernardin did not include Cook in his criticism of those who showed rash judgment.

He does not intend to counterstrike, and he reiterated his earlier offer to meet and pray with his accuser.

Magazine puts faith in fine arts

By Lynn Van Matre
Chicago Tribune

Call it the $40,000 leap of faith.

Bicycling across Vermont on a vacation trip in broke through, Chicagoan Marci Whitney-Schenck found herself struggling physically and mentally. Never athletically inclined, the 43-year-old cyclist kept falling behind her fellow travelers. Meanwhile, as she pushed herself to keep pedaling, Whitney-Schenck was grappling with a decision: Should she follow her dream, despite persistent self-doubts, and launch an interdenominational magazine about Christianity and the arts?

"I had been afraid to commit to the project, because I knew once I did I couldn't walk away from it," recalls Whitney-Schenck, a Catholic who holds master's degrees in art history from the Art Institute. "Then one day I was riding uphill by myself in a pouring rain. The other bikers had disappeared up the road, and I felt so awful I started praying to take my mind off my misery. When I got to the top of the hill, the rain suddenly stopped and the sun broke through."

Shortly after returning home, Whitney-Schenck took the plunge and plowed her life's savings of $40,000 into making her vision of a not-for-profit, Chicago-oriented arts quarterly on Christian expression a reality.

Christianity and the Arts, edited and partially written by Whitney-Schenck and published out of the Lake Shore Drive condo she shares with her surgeon husband, Robert Schenck, recently debuted with a 6,000-issue press run and a $4.50 cover price ($15 annually by subscription).

The 32-page premiere issue includes "art" as features on stained glass windows in Chicago-area churches, a look at the portrayal of Jesus Christ in film and a profile of an African-American painter. Abe Peck, head of the magazine program at Northwestern University's Medill School of Journalism, points out that approximately 800 new consumer magazines appeared in 1993; just over 40 percent will survive to celebrate their third anniversary.

"I know that there are people who are afraid to be known as 'Christian' artists because they think that people will think of them as religious fanatics," she acknowledges. "But when you look at (religious artists like) Michelangelo and Raphael and see all the wonderful images they produced, there is no reason why contemporary Christian musicians and writers and dancers and other artists can't excel at what they are doing."

For more information about Christianity and the Arts, write P.O. Box 118088, Chicago, IL 60611 or 312-642-8666. A sample copy of the magazine is available for $10 from Image, 3100 McCormick Ave., Wichita, Kan. 67213; phone 316-942-4291, ext. 325.

Church council president builds cooperation, understanding among myriad congregations

The Associated Press

BALTIMORE — As a leader of the tiny Moravian Church, the Rev. Gordon L. Sommers had a flock of 56,000 to attend to. Now he's got 49 million.

Sommers was sworn in last November as president of the National Council of Churches, a New York-based ecumenical group that represents people in 32 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations.

The council focuses on social advocacy, refugee assistance, public policy issues, education and dialogue among Christianity's different denominations. About 80 percent of its budget goes to refugee assistance overseas.

Sommers, 58, is the first minister from the Moravian Church to serve as president of the council. Sommers has been president of the Moravian Church's executive board in Bethlehem, Pa.

"One of Sommers' goals is to rebuild bridges to grass-roots ecumenism—promoting cooperation and understanding of differing religious faiths."

"We must facilitate regional and local ecumenism," the minister said. "We've been accused of ignoring evangelism and issues dealing with Christ."

But the council will not ignore its tradition of taking on social issues, Sommers said.

Sommers

At this year's annual board meeting in Baltimore, the group denounced violence in the media. It called on government to develop media standards and tougher regulations but said censorship isn't the answer to the problem of violence.

"It's self-evident that we don't beat up our neighbor," Sommers said. "It's a theological issue. But if it also involves politics, so be it."

The council has taken on other issues. In 1989, it adopted a resolution that supported banning assault weapons and restricting handguns. It supports universal health care and is waiting to take a position on health care reform.

Sommers dismissed critics who think the council is too closely tied to liberal positions on social issues.

Council members hold views that transcend the ideological spectrum and reflect the diversity of the group, he said. "I tell the critics: don't confuse these positions with a corporate response to society which is integral to the Christian faith," Sommers said. "It's a matter of faith."

Ecumenism and evangelism have been the two driving forces in Sommers' life.

Born in Edmonton, Canada, Sommers was educated at Moravian College in Bethlehem, Pa. He has earned advanced degrees in divinity and theology from the Moravian Theological Seminary and the Princeton Theological Seminary.

He also holds a doctorate in ministry from the New York Theological Seminary.

He has served several Moravian pastorates in central Pennsylvania and suburban Washington, D.C.

The Moravian Church was brought to the United States by German missionaries in the 18th century. The church most closely resembles Presbyterianism with an emphasis on evangelism and liturgy.

He also has worked as a missionary in Nicaragua and Guyana.

"I've lived in four different cultures and worked with a variety of people," Sommers said. "My son says he knows what it's like to live as a minority in a different culture."

Sommers wants to reach out to the Roman Catholic and Pentecostal churches and establish talks about a possible future together, although he acknowledged there's been a reluctance from Catholics and Pentecostals to join the council.

"We want to sit down and try to map something out," Sommers said, choosing his words carefully. "We have the green light on our side."

Let Christian values set tone of our lives

I remember a fine little dog that I had on our ranch in Salmon. She was a good watchdog most of the time, but she had a problem with her sense of values. One night in particular, I recall her making a great fuss outdoors. Her voice was so urgent and her barking so sharp that I was sure there was a bear out in the yard causing some trouble. I took my rifle and a light and hurried out to see what was causing all the commotion. I found my faithful dog barking at a large toad she had backed into a corner.

There is something disappointing about a good watchdog, well bred and well fed, giving her all just to corner a toad. Sometimes when I see capable, talented people giving their lives to worthless pursuits, I am reminded of my dog making as much fuss over a toad as she might have made over a bear or a burglar.

Long ago, the Prophet Isaiah saw this problem among people of his time and cried out, "Why spend money, Chaldean Church, and your labor on what does not satisfy?" (Isaiah 55:2, NIV) The reason many of us do such things is because we fail to set worthwhile goals in life; we lack a standard of values that will keep us on the course we want to take for our lives.

A person's life is like a good story or a good symphony. It can have many variations, but it needs a central theme running through it — a theme that sets the tone of the life and gives it a sense of purpose and value.

The Apostle Paul referred to singleness of mind. This doesn't mean being narrow-minded, but it does mean having a definite reason for living.

It is what Jesus called the narrow way that leads to life, in contrast to the broad and easy way that leads to nothingness and a

"We've outgrown our meeting place, too," Nielson said. "We were meeting at our institute, but in January, we moved to the Harrison Street building."

The Rev. Charles Bugg, left, was inspired by his son David's fight with cancer to write a book.

Personal tragedy renews faith for Baptist pastor

By Paul Nowell
The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — When the Rev. Charles Bugg preaches to his congregation about personal loss and bitterness, he's not speaking in the abstract.

"Our family has come face to face with the tragedies of life," said Bugg, 51, the new pastor of Charlotte's Providence Baptist Church. "I don't have any answers to the whys."

Seated next to him on a couch in his office was his 21-year-old son David, whose hard-won bout with brain cancer inspired his father to write a book, "Learning to Dream Again: From Grief to Gratitude."

When he was 11, David Bugg was diagnosed with a brain tumor and underwent several major operations and radiation treatment.

"He survived, but still feels the effects of his ordeal. His endurance is low and his eyesight weak. He had to learn to walk again, and at 5-foot-11½ inches, he will grow no taller."

Bugg, who became pastor of the 2,600-member church three months ago, writes candidly in his 80-page book about how he struggled to understand why God would allow his family to endure so much anguish.

"I surrendered my life to God," he said. "I have always tried to live ethically and morally. And then this."

In the book, Bugg takes on his own personal demons while also taking a critical look at his chosen vocation. He asks himself if David's illness was punishment for being too ambitious or for some other past sin. One message in Bugg's book isn't new. Bad things happen to good people. But it's one that does not often come from a member of the clergy. Bugg asks his readers: "Where do you find God in the midst of this?"

Bugg talks openly about his own rage and ensuing bitterness as he watched his son lay in a hospital bed, his head heavily bandaged after 10 hours of surgery. Later, he had to watch him suffer through numerous radiation treatments, and severe pain and nausea.

The title of his book comes from his own personal journey back to faith.

"When a child enters this world, you dream about what he or she will be like when they grow up," he said. "Something happened to interrupt this dream."

While Bugg once looked at his young son with visions of him playing football and baseball, he now sees him in another way.

"I look at David and I see his strength and courage," he said. "Sure it takes courage to play middle linebacker for the Dallas Cowboys. But he's shown a lot more courage."

David Bugg plans to enroll in a local junior college this year. To his father, David embodies the concept that an individual can overcome life's tragedies with God's help. But no one really ever lives happily ever after.

Either you become frozen in your bitterness or you use your faith to make the choice to move on," Bugg said. "It's time to say pain is real. God is real. Suffering is real."

Fundamentalists affect politics in many countries

Colorado Springs Gazette Telegraph

The word "fundamentalist" has been used to condemn people regarded as religiously narrow, socially backward and intellectually inferior.

It's the religious equivalent of a swear word. It's used to describe a spiritual underclass of Christians who shoot abortion doctors, Moslems who bomb buildings in New York City, or self-proclaimed madmen like David Koresh.

But to Scott Appleby, who is one of 14 religion scholars participating in a symposium at Colorado College, fundamentalism represents one of the most vibrant and important international religious trends of the 20th century.

"It's really unfortunate what the term connotes in the media," says Appleby, a practicing Catholic who for six years has been the associate director of the Fundamentalism Project, a Chicago think tank that studies the growth of religious fundamentalism. "They are not throwbacks or hillbillies; they are not simple or unsophisticated."

From 1983 to 1993, Appleby studied fundamentalist movements in many countries and faith groups, including Christians in the United States, Jews in Israel, and Moslems in the Middle East.

His verdict? Far from being holy hayseeds, many fundamentalists are intelligent and courageous.

"Even more important, fundamentalists are leading a religious revolution that has had a profound impact on world politics."

"In many cases, fundamentalists have studied modern ideas and sensibilities very carefully," he says. "They know how to manipulate the media. They know how to organize. They are very keen."

For example, during six years of research, Appleby came to respect Randall Terry, the controversial anti-abortion activist and founder of Operation Rescue.

Terry figures prominently in "The Glory and the Power: The Fundamentalist Challenge to the Modern World," a book Appleby wrote with his mentor, church historian Martin Marty. The 1992 book was the basis for TV and radio series on fundamentalism that aired last year on PBS and National Public Radio.

"Randall Terry is brilliant," Appleby says. "I don't agree with everything he says — although I agree with a lot of it — but his analysis is very sharp. He provides a very thoughtful analysis that is not given as much attention as it would be if he were in the mainstream of society."

Defining fundamentalism is difficult, and it's a task that takes nearly 30 pages of Appleby's book.

Appleby concludes that fundamentalism is "a tendency, a pattern, a habit of mind rather than something that is definite and self-contained."

Today, Appleby says, fundamentalist movements have a profound impact on politics and globally in many countries, even though they have relatively few members.

"They are a minority in society, but they exercise influence way out of proportion to their numbers because they are such clever observers and students of the modern and the way the world works," Appleby says.

In Israel, for example, members of a small fundamentalist Jewish group called the Gush Emunim claim to be the only true Jews. In Egypt, fundamentalist Muslims join forces with the militant Jihad movement, a group that claimed credit for assassinating Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, disrupting the country's tourist trade, and organizing other skirmishes — all in an effort to force government policies promoting a return to spiritual purity.

Mickelson breaks leg skiing, will stay off links for a while FLAGSTAFF, Ariz. — A broken leg from skiing will keep this year's second leading PGA Tour money winner Phil Mickelson off the golf course for a while.

The left-hander fractured his left femur Thursday at Arizona Snowbowl when he hit some ice, causing his skis to slide from under him. Mickelson's agent, Steve Loy said.

“It’s a pin was inserted from below the hip to above the knee, but Mickelson won’t need a cast, Loy said.

“The doctors say he’ll have a 100 percent recovery,” said Loy, adding that the leg should mend in four to six weeks.

Mickelson, a former Arizona State player, told The Arizona Republic in January he knew of the risks of skiing, but wouldn’t give it up.

Poor timing sends CSI home

Eagle women victimized by timer’s error in 1-point loss to SLCC

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

St. GEORGE, Utah — It’s amazing how many funny things happen in Region 18 games played in Utah.

That’s funny as in peculiar, not funny as in ha-ha.

The Beehive State came up with a new one Friday afternoon, meaning that College of Southern Idaho is out of the women’s regional tournament, losing 66-65 when Salt Lake Community College’s Regan Taylor hit a follow-up shot at the buzzer.

The belated buzzer. There will be no doubt in anyone’s mind attending the game that CSI won — and here’s how.

With 13 seconds left, Salt Lake was awarded possession under the CSI basket. CSI went into a full court contain — not press — defense and Salt Lake’s entry came into the left corner. The guard dribbled it up court. As she crossed the midcourt line, the clock turned to 12. Everyone from CSI was up screaming.

The timer knew he’d blown it but he braced it out. Salt Lake shot a jumper and missed. Taylor took the rebound and made it, the ball still coming into the cone when the buzzer sounded.

Then the timer turned to the old “goodness, I made a mistake” posture and what are you going to do about it? Have Salt Lake Fans tell you to be a sport?

“I hit it (the start button) and when I looked up the clock hadn’t started,” the timer said. “I really don’t know how much time was missed.”

Probably enough to win the game, was the general CSI thought.

Up to that point, CSI was only worried about the officials. SLCC shooting 16 second-half free throws to six for the Eagles.

But the Eagles had hung in — and actually missed enough little inside shots to have won it by 20.

“No, I’m proud of the girls,” said Coach Joel Bate. “They fought through adversity and put themselves in position to win.”

Bruins bounce Rigby

By Mike Maller
Times-News writer

BOISE — Ben Allen did not have to coach the Twin Falls Bruins this year.

He did, and his team is in the state finals now.

Behind Brady Trenkle’s 28 points and its consistent defense, Twin Falls dropped Rigby, 58-44, in a boys’ Class-A state tournament semifinal game Friday.

The Bruins play Borah for the championship at the Boise State University Pavilion at 8 p.m. today.

King VideoCable will air the A-1 and A-2 championship games on Channel 10 beginning at 6 p.m. with the A-2 game. The A-1 contest will begin 30 minutes after the completion of the A-2 game.

Becoming an administrator, Allen has to drop coaching after this season.

“People said, ‘You ought to make the vice principal job and forget about coaching this year,’” Allen said. “A lot of people thought we wouldn’t be 500.”

Now he has an opportunity to add a Class A-1 title to the Class A-2 championship he won with Jerome in 1987.

“We were something like 26-1 at Jerome. Everyone expected us to win,” Allen said. “This is little more fun for me.”

Trenkle padded his total by 10 points in the fourth quarter, helping to keep Rigby at least seven points behind.

He hit two 3-pointers in the first half, but got most of his total off drives to the basket. He picked up several fouls on cuts through the lane, getting fouls from teammates.

“He’s got a lot more things than shoot-

Teton smashes Wendell

The Times-News

MERIDIAN — District 6 champion Teton outsmashed Wendell 19-8 in the third period Friday and went on to blast the Trojans 71-45 in the semifinals of the Idaho Class A-3 basketball tournament.

The Trojans, losers for only the third time in 24 games, return to the Centennial High School gymnasium at 11 a.m. today where they will play for third place against New Plymouth’s 22-2 Pilgrims, a 71-68 Malad victim earlier Friday evening.

Two Nate Kelsey free throws drew the Trojans — who never held the lead — to within one point, 19-20, with 3:08 left to play in the first half.

Kelsey’s charities erased nearly all of an 11-point Wendell deficit created when Redskin forward Travis Thompson dropped in the last of his four first-quarter baskets to put Teton up 15-4.

But Wendell relaxed on defense at that point, allowing Spencer Nead, whose 22 points led both teams, to drive the lane. Teton point-guard Sid Kunz drained a 3-point shot on his team’s final possession for a 30-22 halftime advantage.

Kunz opened the second half with a layoff his own steal, triggering a third Redskin uprising.

Only Vern Elison’s turnaround for the Trojans and a Kelsey bomb midway through the quarter interrupted a breakaway that created at 47-27 on Nead’s third 3-point goal of the quarter with 2:27 showing.

Quin Young came off the Wendell bench to close the period with a bomb, but Vern Elison’s free throws with 5:09 remaining ended another Trojan dry spell, and a 10-point Teton run.

Wendell, which made 14 of 59 two-point attempts to 20 of 39 for their opponents, finished a miserable five of 34 from 3-point range. Redskin shooters connected on six of 17 bombs.

Kelsey, who finished with a Trojan best 13 points, yielded to the frustration of battling a game-long triple team. The four-year varsity letterman watched from the bench as the final three minutes ticked away after being caught for his fifth foul.

Chris Tuttle’s four first-half blocks figured prominently in Wendell’s early resurgence. The 6-3 senior post created four of 10 first-half Teton turnovers and kept the Trojans’ halftime deficit out of

Tigers no match for No. 1 Sugar-Salem

By Dave Goins
Times-News correspondent

MERIDIAN — Top-ranked Sugar-Salem pulled away in the second half to take a 59-41 victory over Jerome Friday night, ending the Tigers’ hopes of winning the A-2 state boys’ basketball tournament.

Jerome, now 14-11 on the season, will play Bishop Kelly at 11 a.m. today at Meridian High School for third place. Bishop Kelly lost 69-53 to American Falls, which will face 24-1 Sugar-Salem in the championship game tonight at the Boise State University Pavilion.

The Tigers never led in the game and the score was tied just twice — at 2-2 and 4-4. But after Chris Williams’ second basket 4, the Diggers’ reeled off 10 consecutive points. Sugar-Salem expanded its lead to 14-4 when Tyler Myers scored a 12-foot jumper at 1:28.

Jerome had to contend with 6-foot, 7-inch Sugar-Salem center Jeff Gee, who scored 18 points and blocked several shots in the third quarter.

The Tigers went on a scoring drought for much of the second half and the Diggers beat the lead to 20 when Robbie Harris hit a three-pointer to make it 44-24 with 5:49 left.

Morris hit a fast-break layup a minute later to double the score to 48-24.

Jerome, which had been cold from outside for much of the game, then got two treys from Chris Williams and one each from Scott Holzen and Aaron Bay to help make the final score a bit more respectable.

The Tigers never cut Sugar-Salem’s lead to less than 10 points in the second half. Williams, a 6-4 senior center, finished with a team-high 16 points — the only Tiger in double figures.

In mysterious turnabout, Harding attacked in park

The Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. — This time, Tonya Harding says she is the assault victim.

Nursing scrapes and bruises, Harding was interviewed Friday by police investigating her report that she was attacked as she walked through a park near the apartment where she has been staying in suburban Beaverton.

Harding herself is the subject of an investigation into her alleged role in the assault on rival figure skater Nancy Kerrigan.

But in another twist to the nearly 2-month saga involving the 23-year-old skater, Harding said she was attacked from behind about 11 p.m. Thursday by a lone assailant after she parked her pickup truck across the park from the apartment complex.

Police said Harding’s report seemed genuine and that they were inclined to believe it was not a random attack.

“We would lean more towards believing that she was the subject of the attack or the focal point of an attack,” Beaverton police spokesman Mark Hyde said.

“I’m feeling OK,” Harding told reporters. “Can’t you guys get a life or something?”

Quintero told police that Harding, who had been out to dinner with friends, pounded on the door and screamed, “Help me, help me!” when he got home Thursday night. Quintero said it took about a minute to calm Harding down enough to find out what happened.

Harding could be heard wailing in the background of Quintero’s call to police.

“I guess I need someone over here right now,” Quintero said. “My best friend was coming walking through the park and was

'Err' Jordan still without a hit

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP) — Will Clark hit a two-run single in his Texas debut, and Jose Canseco homered as the Rangers beat the Chicago White Sox and rookie hopeful Michael Jordan 9-4 Friday.

Jordan grounded back to rookie left-hander Darren Oliver on a 1-2 pitch in his only at-bat, in the seventh inning. Clark's single off Scott Ruffcorn, two Chicago errors and Rob Ducey's two-run homer to greet reliever Wally Rife helped the Rangers score seven runs in the fifth.

Tigers 12, Indians 5

LAKELAND, Fla. — Chad Kreuter had a two-run triple and Alan Trammell a three-run homer among 15 Detroit hits. Cleveland pitcher Charles Nagy appeared completely recovered from shoulder surgery, retiring the first five batters he faced before Detroit scored four runs with two out in the second inning. Kreuter's triple was the key hit.

Phillies 7, Pirates 5

CLEARWATER, Fla. — Consecutive homers by Ricky Jordan and Phil Geisler in the eighth inning off Dennis Powell gave Philadelphia the victory.

Bob Wells saved the game for David Wells. Pete Incaviglia drove in four runs with a homer and two doubles. Pittsburgh (1-1) tied the game in the eighth on a single by Dave Clark. Tracy Woodson had a solo homer for the Pirates.

Red Sox 9, Braves 6

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Mo

Pro baseball spring training

Vaughn had two homers and five RBIs, but John Flaherty's two-out, wind-blown pop single keyed a three-run rally in the 10th inning.

Clayton's Chipper Jones, one of three rookie candidates for the left-field job opened by Ron Gant's broken right leg, had three hits, including a home run, and drove in two runs.

Marlins 9, Royals 6

MIAMI, Fla. — Florida christened its new Space Coast Stadium with five runs in the first inning to beat stumbling Kansas City.

Benito Santiago had a two-run double and rookie Kurt Abbott a two-run single in the fifth. Bob Hamelin's two-run homer gave the Royals a 3-0 lead, but 10 walks and three errors hurt the Royals.

Dodgers 6, Mets 1

PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. — Jose Offerman drove in two runs, and Raul Mondesi homered in support of Tom Candiello, who pitched three hitless innings.

Offerman's two-run double broke a scoreless tie in the fifth. Mondesi led off the sixth with his homer. Offerman and Mike Piazza, the National League's 1993 Rookie of the Year, added RBI singles in the sixth.

Astros 3, Reds 2

KISSIMMEE, Fla. — Tony

Eusebio's single in the bottom of the ninth inning scored Willie Ansley with the winning run.

Ansley opened the inning by walking against Ken Patterson, who then threw a ball through the left side.

Cardinals 5, Twins 4

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Rookie Terry Bradshaw scored the go-ahead run in the ninth inning, and St. Louis won on an unusual play.

The Twins, who got a two-run homer from Kent Hrbek, picked up a run in the ninth, but lost when Alex Cole was thrown out at the plate by first baseman Rodney Brewer after the Cardinals botched a conventional double play.

Blue Jays 6, Orioles 5

DUNEDIN, Fla. — Paul Molitor hit a three-run homer, but Shannon Stewart's triple in the 10th inning scored Domingo Martinez with the winner.

Damon Buford drove in three runs for Baltimore, which like Toronto was playing its first exhibition game. Free agent acquisition Rafael Palmeiro homered for the Orioles.

Mariners 9, Padres 6

PEORIA, Ariz. — Ken Griffey Jr. broke a 4-4 tie with a grand slam, and drove in five runs for Seattle.

Griffey hit the first pitch from Padres reliever Tim Lincecum 430 feet onto the grass behind the right-field bullpen at the new $32 million sports complex used by both teams.

The homer highlighted a six-run fourth inning.

Dave Staloff had a two-run homer for San Diego.

Cubs 7, Giants 2

MESA, Ariz. — Sammy Sosa hit two home runs and drove in five runs, and Shawn Dunston had a big game for Chicago.

Dunston, who has been out of action for two years because of back troubles, went 2-for-2 with a home run and played flawlessly at shortstop. Barry Bonds drove in two runs for San Francisco.

Brewers 4, Athletics 3

CHANDLER, Ariz. — Jose Valentin's sacrifice fly in the bottom of the 10th inning gave Milwaukee the exhibition opener for both teams.

The win went to reliever Joe Wagner, who pitched out of a one-out jam in the 10th with runners on second and third. He struck out Kevin Moore and retired Scott Hemond on an infield pop.

Angels 7, Rockies 6

TEMPE, Ariz. — Showing his well-known flair for the dramatic, Bo Jackson hit a grand slam in the eighth inning to tie the game for California.

Eduardo Perez drove in the decisive run with a two-out pinch single that drove in a pair of runs and capped a six-run rally in the eighth. Howard Johnson homered in his first exhibition at-bat as a member for the Rockies, who also got three hits from Herm Winningham.

Colorado shortstop Vinny Castilla snags a high throw from catcher Eric Wedge as California's Dwight Smith steals second in the teams' exhibition matchup Friday.

Graf hacks away at opponent, moves into Slims semifinal

Steffi Graf hits a backhand shot to fellow German Sabine Hack during their quarterfinal match in the Virginia Slims of Florida Friday.

DELRAY BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Top-seeded Steffi Graf showed no mercy on countrywoman Sabine Hack on her way to a 6-2, 6-1 quarterfinal victory Friday night at the Virginia Slims of Florida.

Graf, the two-time defending champion, will play Helena Sukova, the fifth seed from the Czech Republic, in one semifinal. The 6-foot-2 serve-and-volleyer shocked third-seeded Gabriela Sabatini, 6-4, 6-4.

The other semifinal pits second-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario against 14th-seeded Chanda Rubin of Lafayette, La. Rubin surprised ninth-seeded Natalia Medvedeva of Ukraine, 6-4, 6-0.

Sanchez Vicario took advantage of 40 unforced errors by 14th-seeded Stephanie Reitzler of the Netherlands, winning 6-3, 6-3. Graf, who hasn't lost a match since this year, only showing emotion when she yelled at the chair umpire for not calling a ball out at 5-2, 30-40 of the first set.

Graf won that point and shortly after reeled off 12 straight points to take command.

"It's not that bad what I said, but it's not that good what I said," Graf said, when asked to interpret her German diatribe. "At that stage I was playing aggressively. When I needed to win a point, I knew what to do."

Graf wasn't broken during the hour-long match and won 14 of 18 net approaches.

Sukova utilized her strong serve-and-volley attack to ride a break in each set on her way to her first victory over Sabatini since 1988. Sabatini had won 10 straight matches, but now has played 30 consecutive tournaments without a championship.

"I just need that turning point to get back that confidence again," said Sabatini, who was unable to break Sukova during the 1-hour, 35-minute match. "It's a little disappointing to lose every time. It's not enough and doesn't make me feel good by losing a match like this."

For Sukova to reach the final, she'd have to wipe out another streak. She hasn't defeated Graf since their first meeting in 1983, when Graf was 13. She's 1-20 lifetime against the world's No. 1 player.

"It was my first tournament on grass," Graf said of her loss to Sukova at Brisbane. "Since then I haven't lost to her, but we've had a couple of close matches in between."

Rubin, 18, who will play in her fourth career semifinal, and third this year, blasted 21 forehand winners and pinned Medvedeva on the baseline with a 95-mph first serve during her 6-4, 6-0 victory.

Rubin broke Medvedeva in the first game of the second set after six deuces, and seemingly broke the Ukrainian's spirit. "The first game of the second set is one of the most important games of the match even if you win or lose," said Rubin, who lost to Sanchez Vicario 6-0, 6-1 at the U.S. Open last year. "Winning that first game put her down a little bit more."

Nelson rides eagles to Doral-Ryder Open lead

MIAMI (AP) — Larry Nelson scored an eagle-3 in a back-nine blitz of 29 that lifted him into a one-stroke lead Friday at the halfway point of the $1.4 million Doral-Ryder Open.

But the 46-year-old former U.S. Open and PGA champion was so Open and PGA champion was so caught up in his string of 7-23 that over his last nine holes that he was unaware of how far he had advanced.

"I kind of got lost in the round and I didn't know whether I was 5, 6 or 7-under," he said.

When he added it up, he found he was 7-under — both for the tournament and for his back nine — and 8-under for the day.

That gave him 29 over his last nine holes, 64 for the day and a 137 total on Doral's 18-hole course that again was swept with strong, gusty winds.

This, however, was much more the usual wind, something like 20 mph; about half the velocity of the gale-force blasts that hampered opening round play.

"I think everybody was still shell-shocked and tired from yesterday," said Dick Mast, one of three tied for second at 138. "It wasn't that strong today, but it was hard to play."

Mast, 42, who has yet to win in a 14-season career, had another 69 and was tied with Billy Andrade and John Huston, each with a 68.

Brad Bryant, with a 69, was next at 139. Jim Thorpe, who shared the first-round lead, had to work hard for a round of 72 and a 140 total.

Ray Floyd, a 51-year-old, three-time winner of this title who was tied for the top after the first 18 holes, blew to a 76 and was at 144.

Defending champion Greg Norman was one shot higher after a 74.

Nick Price, the 1993 PGA Tour Player of the Year, shot 73 and hit the score necessary to qualify for the final two rounds, 148.

Jack Nicklaus and English ace Nick Faldo weren't so fortunate.

Faldo, making his first American start of the year, missed by one stroke after pulling a wedge shot into the water on his final hole and taking a 76. Nicklaus was 73-153.

Johnny Miller didn't even try to make it. The upset winner of the Pebble Beach National Pro-Am last month, withdrew from second-round play after opening this event with an 83.

Nelson, whose last American victory came within sight of his home in the 1988 Atlanta Classic, said he used a different putter and a new caddy in his back-nine burst.

The caddy is his 15-year-old son, Josh, making his first appearance on his father's bag.

Papers 'ad' to Harding's pain

NEW YORK (AP) — The ad is supposed to be a knee-slapper, but Tonya Harding's lawyers aren't laughing.

A potential legal brawl has emerged over use of the Olympic figure skater's photo in a pun-filled newspaper ad for two music bargain stores.

The skater's lawyers said Harding, under investigation in the Jan. 6 attack on rival Nancy Kerrigan, hasn't authorized commercial use of her name or likeness. The lawyers, led by Dennis Rawlinson of Portland, Ore., said they "will consider aggressively prosecuting" anyone who does.

The full-page ad, which appeared in two New York weeklies, serves as an ironic reminder of how Harding's fortunes have faded since the attack that bruised Kerrigan's knee.

Harding started the year with high hopes for winning the Olympic gold medal and enjoying the adulation and endorsement opportunities that usually follow. But she finished eighth and many ad experts say the Kerrigan incident, doomed any chances for endorsement deals.

The ad in the current Village Voice and NY Press was for two Tower Clearance Outlets owned by Tower Records in New York.

The photo of Harding in the upper left corner adjoins a cartoon balloon that suggests she is saying, "Unbelievable bargains that will bring you to your knees."

The ad continues to play on the Kerrigan incident with phrases like "prices have been pounded into the ground," "find yourself knee-deep in loads of laser discs" and "the final blow."

"Better leg it down to the Tower Clearance Outlet, or you'll be skating on thin ice," the ad concludes.

Copywriter Louise Solomon said

the ad was to appear only once but declined comment Friday about where the idea for the ad and the photo originated.

But she was quoted earlier this week by The Wall Street Journal as saying the ad was meant as a "topical" attention-getter.

"We don't want to offend anyone. It's just a way of presenting something jolly and interesting. I hope she feels the same way," the newspaper quoted Solomon.

Chris Breining, who handles customer relations for Tower parent MTS Inc. in Sacramento, Calif., said the company hadn't heard from Harding's lawyers.

Douglas Wood, who specializes in advertising law for the firm Hall Dickler Lawler Kent & Friedman in New York, said most major states prohibit advertisers from using people's names or likenesses without written permission.

While there are some exceptions, Wood said the music store ad with Harding "may be going over the line." He said some people who see the ad may think she has endorsed the store's products.

This isn't the first company trying to exploit Harding's notoriety. A Minnesota man began advertising a "Tonya Tapper" telescoping baton for sale by mail last month.

The Oregonian in Portland reported a book company has published a comic book parody called "Whacked! The Adventures of Tonya Harding and Her Pals."

But one advertiser that has employed women involved in controversy like Donna Rice and Maria Maples to push its jeans and sportswear has decided against trying to sell Harding, at least for now.

Darl Marder, vice president of marketing for New Retail Concepts, a consultant on advertising for the U.S. figure skating champion Tonya Harding leaves her apartment in Beaverton, Ore., Friday. Harding said she was attacked in a nearby parking lot Thursday night and suffered cuts and bruises.

No Excuses brand, said Harding doesn't currently possess the liability. No Excuses wants from its spokeswomen.

The country is waiting to hear how her legal issues pan out. If she is cleared, she will be a much more likeable figure," Marder said.

Harding

coming walking through the park and was grabbed by someone and she's freaking out."

Harding was "very visibly upset" and suffering an asthma attack when officers arrived. Rescue personnel gave her oxygen. After she took asthma medicine, she was able to talk.

"She said that about halfway through the park, she was pushed from behind, at which time she landed on her hands and knees," officer Lori Betz said in her report. "She struggled a bit and was able to activate her personal security system, which emits a very loud, strong scream."

Thompson scared away the assailant, believed to be male, Harding said. A grand jury is investigating Harding's role in the attack on Kerrigan, who was struck about the right knee in Detroit Jan. 6.

Harding's ex-husband, Jeff Gillooly, has pleaded guilty to racketeering for his part in the Kerrigan assault. He says Harding was in on the scheme and gave the final go-ahead.

Harding, who denies his allegations, has told several people that she was concerned Gillooly had been following her, but police said he was no more a suspect than anyone else who has had contact with the skater. Neither Gillooly nor his attorney could be reached for comment.

In the police report, Betz said

Harding was asked if she felt it was an intentional attack by someone who knew her.

"She said that she is not sure what to believe anymore," Betz wrote.

Mideast talks in jeopardy, PLO says

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Palestinians will not return to Middle East peace talks until Israel addresses Palestinian demands for better protection following the Hebron massacre, PLO negotiator Faisal Husseini said Friday.

"We haven't given up on the peace. But I don't know if I can still be optimistic about this peace process. I'm afraid that this peace process is dying," said Husseini, the PLO's top representative in the occupied territories.

Israel opposes any outside military presence in the occupied territories, and has said only that it would consider allowing international observers to supervise its withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and the West Bank town of Jericho.

Husseini spoke to reporters after an hour-long meeting with Foreign Minister Carlos Papoulias of Greece, which currently holds the European Union presidency.

Papoulias also met with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, and said an international force to protect the 1.8 million Palestinians in the occupied territories was under discussion.

But he did not say if Israel has softened its opposition to an outside military presence.

"We're ready to consider every possible means to enhance the security and the feeling of safety to all concerned," Peres said after the meeting.

French Foreign Minister Alain Juppe said he expected a decision "in due time, under authority of the United Nations" for an observer force.

Police move to stop violence at prayers

The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Jewish settlers killed a Palestinian and troops shot dead two others in the occupied territories Friday as the violence sparked by the Hebron mosque massacre raged into its second week with no end in sight.

Fearing trouble after Muslims attended prayers, security forces were deployed in large numbers throughout the territories and Jerusalem.

"There's still a lot of tension," said Jerusalem police spokesman Shmuel Ben-Ruby.

In Jerusalem, hundreds of policemen girded the Temple Mount — a site of frequent violence between Muslims and Jews who both have shrines there — and virtually sealed off the walled old city.

Security forces briefly barred Jews from their holiest site, the Wailing Wall, in an unprecedented move to avoid clashes with Arabs on the Muslim Sabbath. Arabs also were kept from the al-Aqsa mosque, Islam's third-holiest site.

In Hebron, masked Palestinians, some of them firing marbles from slingshots, defied a curfew and clashed with troops in barricaded streets filled with tear-gas and black smoke from burning tires.

U.N. worries peace will stall

The Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The momentum for peace that has been built on the longest cease-fire in nearly two years of war is in danger because Western powers are unwilling to send more troops to Bosnia, U.N. commanders said Friday.

The U.N. has called for an additional 10,700 troops — 4,000 for Sarajevo and the rest to monitor a cease-fire between Muslim-led government forces and Bosnian Croats elsewhere. That would nearly double the U.N. contingent in Bosnia.

But the plea appears to have fallen on deaf ears.

"Obviously, it's a disappointment," said the U.N. commander for Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose. The cease-fire "will start to crumble. There are people who are ready to go back to war."

The Bosnian Serbs besieging Sarajevo and the Muslim-led government troops defending it mostly have redeployed, not disbanded, their forces.

In central and southwestern Bosnia, government and Bosnian Croat troops still face off across front lines, although a week-old truce has mostly held.

U.N. commanders need troops to establish buffer zones, man checkpoints, operate "confidence-building" patrols, guard weapons collection points, establish rapid deployment forces to rush to areas of cease-fire violations, and operate radar-monitoring equipment.

Soldiers have been pulled out of positions elsewhere in Bosnia to help enforce the Sarajevo cease-fire. But U.N. forces are being stretched thinner every day and no help is on the way.

France, whose 6,000 U.N. peacekeepers are the largest contingent in former Yugoslavia, indicated Friday it won't send any more. Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Catherine Colonna said other countries "have not responded fully" to U.N. requests.

Britain hasn't ruled out adding to its contingent, but Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd said it "must be a shared effort, and there is such a thing as fair shares."

Washington has refused to commit any ground troops without a political settlement, a position French Gen.

French U.N. troops sandbag their positions in Sarajevo Friday. U.N. commanders say a tenuous cease fire and momentum toward peace are endangered by Western powers' unwillingness to send more peacekeeping troops.

Jean Cot, the U.N. commander in former Yugoslavia, has termed "not very courageous."

Washington has contributed in other ways. It was the threat of airstrikes by a NATO force including U.S. warplanes, along with political intervention by Washington and Moscow, that compelled Serbs to withdraw their heavy weapons from Sarajevo.

U.S. diplomatic pressure also persuaded Muslims and Croats to stop shooting and start talking about a confederation.

Joint commissions are marking the front lines in central Bosnia and identifying U.N. buffer zones. U.N. patrols are supposed to start Saturday.

But with too few troops, those buffer zones could be easily violated.

Provocations, vendetta killings and isolated incidents could unravel the cease-fire, as they have past truces.

Even in Sarajevo, where a truce has mostly held for nearly three weeks, violations continue. French troops opened fire Thursday to stop a gun battle between Bosnian Serb and government forces.

Privately, U.N. officials said they are concerned about troop quality as well as numbers.

Of about a dozen countries contributing to the U.N. force, the British, Russian and French are the best trained and equipped. Others, such as Egyptians, Jordanians and Malaysians, often are poorly equipped and ill-prepared to operate for Bosnia's rough terrain and winter weather.

National rivalries can strain relations. U.N. officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, say there's little love lost between French Brig. Gen. Andre Soubirou, commander of the Sarajevo garrison, and Rose, who is British.

Though the United Nations has welcomed the arrival of Russian troops to Serb-held sections of Sarajevo, officials say privately that coordination is flawed. There is no Russian officer on Rose's staff.

"They really don't know what the Russians are up to," said one U.N. official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Local history often complicates the choice of troops. Turkey, a NATO member, has offered soldiers, but Serbs object because Turks used to rule Bosnia during the Ottoman Empire. The Bosnian government is suspicious of Russians because of their cultural ties to the Serbs.

In other developments Friday, Bosnian Croat and Muslim-led government representatives were beginning talks Friday in Vienna, Austria, on details of a preliminary accord reached in Washington to form a confederation with ties to neighboring Croatia.

U.N. officials reported continued rapes, beatings and killings of non-Serbs in the Serb stronghold of Banja Luka in northwestern Bosnia. U.N. relief spokesman Kris Janowski said at least five people have been murdered since early January, apparently as part of a terror campaign against non-Serbs.
